WEDNESDAY, APRIL 26, 1916.

Perhaps that German squadron was too proud to stop and fight.

Villa seems to be as much of a success at evasion as he was at invasion.

Lillian Russell says beauty is misfortune. It is, and especially when you lose it.

Billy Sunday says all the devils hell can spare are in the city of Baltimore. Billy hasn't been to Columbia yet.

Wonder if that new paper down in Deafport is still telling "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth."

The battle of words has been on between the United States and Germany about long enough for the lie to be passed.

Pavlov Had to Pay Preacher—headline. That good sister was either very, very devout, or the hat wasn't in style.

Attack With Beer Pail—headline. How would you like to be attacked with a beer pail, or would you rather attack a beer pail.

Now Carranza is demanding an early answer to his note. Old man, we're occupied ourselves just at present with an expected early answer to a note.

The York News threatens to write an editorial on "Fools We Have Known." Sorry, Watson, you don't think your day of knowing fools is past.

Now it is reported that Villa was not wounded at all. And yet many a fibe have we poked at Petrograd for whopping lies sent out from that point.

The pen may not be mightier than the sword, but some press bureau typewriters are butchering the truth in a fashion that would make the sword look sick.

The real musical event of the south, with an atmosphere about it, is the Spartanburg Festival—Spartanburg Herald. Plenty of "atmosphere" all right, of the kind we call "hot."

There is a crisis in the British Cabinet. Greece has on a crisis at the present writing. China has been having them regularly for some time. They are all the go at present.

WE MUST SEE IT THROUGH.

It was evident in Mexico from the first that the United States, having put its hand to the plow, could not turn back. The present opposition of Carranza and the resentment of the population, half expected from the first, do not change the situation. It was necessary to enter Mexico to punish Villa and teach a lesson to Mexican bandits in general. It is now more than ever necessary to stay there until that purpose is accomplished.

To withdraw our troops would mean encouraging lawlessness and contempt for the power of the United States. It would mean new forays across the border, new slaughter of American citizens on American soil. We should then have to start all over again and perform the task properly. To recall part of the troops might be an even greater mistake, for it would not only encourage subsequent aggressions but would place the forces left in Mexico in deadly peril.

It must be recognized that, after the clashes that have occurred between our soldiers and the natives, no more friendly co-operation can be counted on. As long as our troops remain in Mexico they will have to be on guard against a hostile people. Their task will grow continually more difficult. They will need, therefore, every man and every bit of equipment that can be sent them.

All this will be more and more distasteful to the Mexicans and their blustering "First Chief." But if they don't like it, they have a simple remedy. Let them dispose of Villa, their own enemy even more than ours, and our army will retire from Mexico with promptness and celerity.

A PESSIMISTIC VIEW.

Under the above caption the Newberry Observer says editorially:

We confess to some surprise, as well as disappointment, to see the following in the editorial columns of the Anderson Intelligencer:

"We have often wondered, if it cost them something in real money, how many real prohibitionists there would be in this country; or, if instead of just working their bazoos, or talking, shouting and tearing their shirts for the betterment and uplift of the community in which they lived, all these fellows had to pay something for the privilege, to what extent would their enthusiasm run."

"We are strong advocates of reform and we believe in most anything for the betterment of the community so long as somebody else is paying for it or doing the work. Ever think about it?"

"How much does it cost you in real money to be a prohibitionist?" That strikes us a very pessimistic view. If a man is a genuine prohibitionist, he is not one for gain anyhow, nor does he count the cost to himself, nor the loss either.

There is no reason to suppose that a prohibitionist is in the work for any selfish purpose; on the other hand, if he is the genuine article, he is in it for the good of others primarily and chiefly.

To say the least, prohibitionists make as many sacrifices for others' benefit as what shall we call them?—quor men or non-prohibitionists.

Is The Intelligencer wanting to discourage advocates of prohibition?

We must confess to some surprise, too, and it is that The Observer should have garbled as it does the editorial from this paper referred to. It was unintentional, of course, on the part of our worthy contemporary, and we would suggest that some day when he has the time he read the editorial again. If after that he doesn't "get us," we'll undertake to tell him in plainer words what we meant.

$25,000,000 WAR CHARITY.

A review of American contributions for war relief shows that our cash gifts amount to the impressive total of $25,000,000. There have been many other donations, in the form of clothing, food, etc., difficult to estimate.

Belgium, as might be expected, comes first in the list of beneficiaries, having received nearly $7,400,000. Next in size comes the fund raised by the Jewish Relief Committee, totaling $5,500,000, most of which has gone to Russia and Poland. Organizations for relief in Germany, Austria-Hungary and allied nations have raised $5,000,000. The American Polish Jewish Relief Commission has $1,000,000 to its credit. Numerous smaller funds have been raised by other organizations. Altogether 75 different bodies have been engaged in relief work.

Twenty-five million is a respectable sum to give for foreign charity. And yet there is no reason for feeling particularly proud of it. In comparison with the need and our own giving power, it looks small.

The grand total spent in relief work in Europe since the war began is estimated at $250,000,000. If that estimate is correct, we have given only one-tenth the money devoted to ameliorating war suffering outside the regular government channels. The help of private and European neutrals, in spite of their heavy burdens, have given more liberally than we have. We are incomparably richer, and we are profiting by the very causes that are impoverishing Europe. We really ought to have a better record in this matter than a mere 25 cents apiece in twenty months.

WHEN IS A PERSON DEAD?

Medical science continues to rival the legendary feats of ancient miracle workers. Physicians at Johns Hopkins hospital in Baltimore are experimenting with a serum which appears to restore life in persons, who, by all the ordinary tests, would be pronounced dead dead from asphyxiation or drowning. So far they have experimented only with animals, but they are satisfied that the serum would work similarly on human beings. One case reported is that of a dog that had been drowned four hours before the treatment was begun. The dead dog was brought back to life by an injection of the serum. It died later, however, of blood pressure—a dangerous after-effect which the doctors are trying to guard against.

Wonderful results have been obtained by the use of the pulmotor, to induce artificial respiration, but there is said to be no case on record of an animal or person that has been revived by a pulmotor after having been "dead" for as long as four hours.

The Johns Hopkins treatment seems to parallel the recent discovery that persons apparently killed by electric shock may be revived by the injection of adrenalin. Dozens of men have been returned to life by this means in the last few years.

Just the other day it was reported that a life had been restored by much simpler means. It was one of the common cases of a still-born child. The baby was dead, according to all the established tests. But the doctor breathed into its mouth steadily and regularly for twenty minutes, at the end of which time it set up a lusty howl.

We used to suppose that a person died definitely at a particular moment, and that was the end of him. But these discoveries make the matter very perplexing. When is a person dead? How can we tell? How long does it take for the last spark of life to leave the body? We simply have to confess that we don't know. We are beginning to suspect that millions of people in the past have been given up for dead, and allowed to stay dead, who today might be recalled for years of added usefulness.

FIELD DRILLS HELD YESTERDAY MORNING

Yesterday at 8 o'clock a. m., the battalions were formed and were marched out on the maneuver grounds north of the camp. For three hours, until 11 o'clock, they drilled, each battalion acting as an advance guard for imaginary regiments. The battalions were in charge of Majors, Agnew, Carlisle and Acker.

On reaching the maneuver grounds a halt was made, and each battalion established outposts for imaginary regiments in camp.

This morning there will be a field engagement between the Blue and White armies. One battalion will constitute the White army, the men wearing white bands around their hats. The other two battalions will constitute the Blue army, blue caps. Attacks will be made, but blank cartridges will be used.

The field exercises are very interesting and those who witnessed them yesterday morning were very much impressed with the maneuvers of the cadets.

The cadets appear to be having a great time, and are appreciative of the courtesies extended to them by the people of Anderson. Unless they are retained at Camp Cummings because of duties, they are down town and the streets are full of them. They are receiving a warm welcome on every corner and each and everyone are doing their best to give enjoyment to the Clemson boys.

FRED JOHNSON HURT YESTERDAY

Carrier Boy for The Intelligencer Had Arm Caught in Shaft in Press Room.

Fred Johnson, one of the carrier boys for The Intelligencer, was painfully injured early Tuesday morning when he was caught in a piece of shafting in the press room. The lad suffered a broken and lacerated arm, and so far as could be determined yesterday, was not injured elsewhere. He was given prompt medical attention and last night was reported to be resting as well as could be expected.

The little fellow met with the accident as a result of playing about machinery while it was in motion. As a rule, the carriers have been printed when the carrier boys call at the press room in the morning for their papers for delivery in the city.

On Tuesday morning, however, the press was late in starting and practically all of the carriers had arrived before the machinery had stopped running. Fred and several other carriers were waiting in the press room for their papers at the time the accident occurred. The main shaft used in driving the press is attached to the overhead beams of the press room, and while the ceiling of this room is low, the shafting is well above the head of an ordinary man, being something like six feet from the floor. It is said that the lad was standing upon a roll of paper and throwing his satchel, which is used for carrying papers across the revolving shaft overhead and watching it wind about the shaft. Suddenly the satchel refused to slip in the shaft when the lad pulled on it, and in the twinkling of an eye he was jerked off his feet and drawn up to the ceiling.

The pressman was on the opposite side of the press from the lad and could not see him and, as a matter of fact, didn't know the boy was in the press room. The only other employees in the press room, the mailing clerk and the negro janitor, who placed the papers in the mailing pouches, were busy at their tasks, with their backs turned toward the spot where Fred Johnson was standing while playing with the shaft. As the boy was snatched up by the shaft he uttered a cry and the pressman immediately brought the press to a complete stop. It was then that he

The occurrence is deeply regretted by the little fellow's employers and everything possible to relieve the lad's suffering and make him comfortable is being done. Fred is one of the best carries in the employ of The Intelligencer, and it is earnestly hoped that he will soon be able to return to his work.
